

KISWAHILI

Hudumika.

To be served. To be attended to. To receive care. Hudumika is the passive form of -huduma ("service") — not "to serve," but the experience of being served.

The product is customs paperwork, ledgers, and payroll. The brand is the feeling that someone is taking care of it for you.

Attentive

Dependable

Unhurried confidence

Not

cold

not bureaucratic

not

a fintech-generic gradient

CURRENT VISUAL LANGUAGE

Customs declarations.

DM Sans (plain) + Cormorant Garamond italic
(accent word)

The one constraint that matters most: the accent color above is not fixed — every customer gets their own, computed live for legibility. Design a rule for how color behaves, not a fixed palette. Full mechanism in the companion brief.

FAST REFERENCE

LEAN INTO

- + Warmth applied with restraint — this is used all day, not browsed once
- + One quiet moment of craft per screen (the italic accent word is the current example) rather than decoration everywhere
- + Clarity that reads as respect for the operator's time

AVOID

- Generic SaaS-blue-gradient-on-white — it's already what every competitor looks like
- Cold, purely "efficient" institutional tone — the name itself argues against it
- A palette that assumes one brand color forever
- Icon or illustration styles that can't survive being recolored live